

Précis

Précis When the Titanic was sailing in the North Atlantic, an iceberg was seen by a lookout. After the alarm had been given, the ship turned sharply sailing alongside the iceberg. Still a weak shaking sound was heard from below, so the captain went down to see what had happened and found that the ship was sinking quickly. When the order to abandon ship was given, everyone jumped overboard, but 1500 people were drowned because there were not enough lifeboats for everyone.
